Hans Danuser: Erosion

Photographs 1980 to 2006

Jakob Tuggener: Ball Nights

Photographs 1930 to 1950

The Museum Moscow House of Photography in collaboration with Fotomuseum Winterthur and Fotostiftung Schweiz are presenting two independent exhibitions on two of the most important 20th-century Swiss photographers that will simultaneously take place at the House of Photography. One exhibition will introduce Hans Danuser (born 1953) with photographic works from the past 25 years, the other will show Jakob Tuggener's (1904-88) photographs of ball nights from 1930s to 50s.

On the surface, the exhibitions seem to be so different that it would hardly make any sense to show them at the same time since they deal with entirely different subject matters and were created in different periods. And yet, they share certain characteristics that could be highlighted if the exhibitions, their architecture and design, would be carefully planned. Both Danuser and Tuggener always considered themselves artists before photography became part of contemporary art and both renounced the single image early on – Danuser may even have done so under the influence of Tuggener's book Fabrik especially recognisable in Danuser's workcycle In Vivo 1980 to 1989.

The work of these two major exponents Swiss photography lends itself to outline a little history of photography – from the 1930s to today, from classic photojournalism to photography's reception in contemporary art, from the single image to the book and the spatial installation. Thus, the two exhibitions could engender dynamic correspondences and contrasts that would point beyond the Swiss context and the apparent subject matter of the single-work groups.
